At a Christie's auction in October 1998, a battered medieval manuscript sold for two million dollars to an anonymous bidder, who then turned it over to the Walters Art Museum in Baltimore for further study. The manuscript was a palimpsest—a book made from an earlier codex whose script had been scraped off and the pages used again. Behind the Early in The Archimedes Codex, Reviel Netz (2007) makes the bold and poetic claim, "The safest general characterization of the European scientific tradition is that it consists of a series of footnotes to Archimedes" (p. 27). In this way, Netz sets the tone and captures both the legend and the importance of Archimedes in western science, history, and culture.
