The Making of a Chef: Mastering Heat at the Culinary documents Michael Ruhlman's experiences inside the Culinary Institute of America (CIA). The first half of the book was especially interesting to me -- the approach to the training and content of the classes, the seriousness of the instructors, the techniques and cooking details, the overall intensity of the experience. But it's told from the perspective of a journalist. While Ruhlman had interest and potential as a cook, he didn't approach things with the same focus and abso

Making of a Chef is a true, unself-serving account of the training regiment for a student of culinary arts at The Culinary Institute of America (CIA). Unlike the many self-serving books "authored" by celebrity chefs, Michael Ruhlman attempts and succeeds in journaling his experience as an author invited to experience the hands-on cookery training at the CIA. My son is a student at the CIA and
