The Real Cool Killers Chester Himes. Two colored men were driving east on 135th Street in the wake of a crosstown bus. Shapeless dark hats sat squarely on their clipped kinky heads and their big frames filled up the front seat of a small battered black sedan. Static cracked from the shortwave radio and a metallic voice said: Calling all cars. Riot threatens in Harlem. White man running South

Chester Himes novel, The Real Cool Killers, appears to be a detective fiction novel and follows many of the rules of the suspense type given by Todorov, but not all. Therefore, following Todorov's essay, Himes novel can be considered literature because it appears to follow the suspense kind of detective fiction but manages to transcend and expand upon the basic rules of its genre.

The Real Cool Killers (first published in France as Il Pleut des Coups Durs in 1958) are anything but cool. The gang Himes creates is made up of a ragtag bunch of bored teenagers led by an arrogant kid calling himself Sheik who taunts and insults everyone around him. A little man in the ghetto who becomes a big man when he has a zip gun or a knife in his hand. Shedding their ghetto identities
