In David Lodge's fiction, it's difficult to discern the difference between intellectual and sexual tension. In his 1990 novel Nice Work, for example, Lodge made an unlikely couple out of a post-structuralist academic who wrote off love as a culturally created fiction, and an unhappily married businessman who pined for the love described on

Similar to, for example, Julian Barnes' England, England (1998), Thinks is a highly philosophical text full of food for thought. The intellectual discussion in the novel centres around the question of consciousness .
